The relationship between language and gender has long been of interest within social linguistics and related disciplines. Early 20th century studies in linguistic anthropology looked at differences between women's and men's speech through a 1. _____ range of languages, in many cases identified distinct female 2. _____ and male language forms.

As a field prompted by the blossoming western women's movement, language and gender really took off in the 1970s with a broad interest, particularly from feminist researchers, in the potential for female dominance of mixed gender talk (e.g. 3. _____ men interrupting women more often than vice versa); in the identification of distinct female and male speaking styles (a common finding being that women tended to use more supportive or cooperative speaking styles, and men more competitive styles); and in sexism or sexist bias in language. Research saw women's language users deficient (relative to men's) in various ways; the male dominant position placed a 4. _____ greater emphasis on differences in power between female and male speakers; and the cultural difference position saw women's and men's language users culturally different and not 5. _____ unequal. Women's and men's language use have also been 6. _____ interpreted in relation to politeness theory, with women seen as more linguistically polite to men. 7. _____

More recently, and particularly in studies carried out since the early 1990s, gender has been really conceptualized in a 8. _____ significant extent, influenced by contemporary theories associated with post-structuralism. Gender is seen as a less fixed and unitary phenomenon, with studies emphasizing 9. _____ considerate diversity among female and male speakers; the shifting relationship between gender and other aspects of 10. _____ identity and importance of context determining how people use language.

III. Reading Comprehension (40%, two points for each)

Directions: For this part, you are allowed 60 minutes to go over the passages and choose the best answer from the 4 choices and write the corresponding letter on your ANSWER SHEET.

Passage 1

Our culture has caused most Americans to assume not only that our language is universal, but the gestures we use are understood by everyone. We do not realize that waving goodbye is the way to summon a person from the Philippines to one's side or that in Italy and some Latin-American countries, curling the finger to one self is a sign of farewell.
